Chapter 17: The Pavilion of the Divine Legacy

The two second clones, Absolute Humanoid Being (Sung Jin-Woo’s clone) and Absolute Dragonic Being (Sung Su-Ho’s clone), now assuming the identities of the Sung Clan, sought to blend seamlessly into the world they had protected for generations. While the world knew the Sung Clan as a powerful family—renowned across realms for their unmatched strength and influence—the two clones operated in the shadows, their true nature known only to those closest to them.

In their new guise, they aimed to ensure the continued prosperity of the Sung family legacy by constructing an awe-inspiring pavilion, a symbol of their divine authority and eternal bond with the multiverse. This pavilion was not just a sanctuary but also a strategic base for the Sung Clan’s training, administration, and expansion.

The Pavilion's Construction

Built on a vast, secluded land in Korea, the Pavilion of the Divine Legacy was designed to be the ultimate center of both strength and knowledge. Its construction was a masterpiece that seamlessly blended beauty, functionality, and divine power. With the resources and abilities of the Absolute Humanoid Being and Absolute Dragonic Being, the pavilion rose swiftly, a breathtaking display of their powers.

1. Library of Infinite Knowledge

The library was no ordinary collection of books; it contained ancient texts, divine scrolls, and knowledge from across the multiverse. The shelves were stocked with records of forgotten realms, forbidden magic, and detailed histories of both the Divine Triad and the Sung Clan. Here, those of the clan and beyond could learn the secrets of creation and destruction, shadow manipulation, celestial healing, and more.

The second clones ensured that the library was not only a repository of knowledge but also a place of meditation and enlightenment, where every member could deepen their understanding of their powers.

2. Training Grounds of the Divine

The training grounds were expansive and multifaceted, allowing for combat, elemental control, and mental conditioning. Divided into areas for different forms of combat, the Sung Clan's warriors honed their skills here daily.

From traditional martial arts to elemental mastery (light, shadow, and dragon abilities), this space catered to both physical and metaphysical development. The Second Clones often acted as mentors, guiding the younger generations in the techniques passed down from the Divine Triad.

There were special arenas where shadow lords, fiery dragon lords, and celestial dragons could spar, creating a battlefield of unimaginable power to prepare for any threat.

3. The Main Hall of Unity

The Main Hall stood as a symbol of the Sung Clan's unity. Crafted from rare and divine materials, it was an ethereal place where major decisions were made, family gatherings took place, and sacred oaths were sworn.

This hall was filled with banners of the Divine Triad, etched with their powers and legacy. The main hall held the grand throne, which was shared between the two second clones when they needed to formally present themselves as the leaders of the clan.

When the time came for the children of Sung Jin-Woo and Sung Su-Ho to make decisions that affected the future of the Sung Clan, the hall became the center for those discussions, attended by the warriors, tacticians, and those who served the clan.

4. Mansions and Personal Residences

The pavilion also housed luxurious mansions, designed to accommodate the clan members and their families. These mansions were built with divine comfort, where every need was met, from heavenly gardens to sanctuaries for rest and reflection.

Each mansion was personalized for the respective family members of the Sung Clan, ensuring that they could feel the full weight of their divine heritage while living in a home that honored their legacy.

5. Gardens of Tranquility

The Gardens of Tranquility surrounded the entire pavilion, designed as a place of peace and reflection. These gardens were vast, with every flower, tree, and stream imbued with magic that nurtured the souls of those who wandered through.

Here, clan members could rest, meditate, or commune with nature to refresh their spirits after intense training or battle. The beauty and serenity of the gardens mirrored the balance between light and shadow, destruction and creation, the heart of the Divine Triad's philosophy.

6. Garages of the Future

The Garages within the pavilion were spaces that held advanced technologies and magical constructs. Here, vehicles for rapid travel across realms and specialized equipment for battle were stored.

Designed to blend technology with magic, the Garages of the Pavilion housed relics from ancient battles, as well as modern devices for transportation and communication. These tools ensured that the Sung Clan was always prepared, no matter where or when the multiverse called them to fight.

The True Purpose of the Pavilion

Though the Pavilion of the Divine Legacy seemed like a place of luxury and comfort, its true purpose was far more profound. It was a fortress, a sanctuary, and a training ground all in one. The second clones were not only continuing the work of the Sung Clan but also preparing for the unknown threats that loomed on the horizon.

The Pavilion served as the birthplace of a new era for the Sung Clan. It was where Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin’s children would receive their training and guidance to inherit the true power of their parents. It would be a haven for all those loyal to the Divine Triad, providing them with the tools, resources, and knowledge they needed to confront any challenge, whether it be from the known realms or from unknown threats.

And so, the pavilion stood as the center of the Sung Clan's power, a place that would shape the future of the multiverse, ensuring that the balance of creation, destruction, and everything in between would be upheld for generations to come.

The legacy of the Divine Triad and the Sung Clan was secure. The pavilion symbolized not just the triumphs of the past, but the potential of the future, where the next generation of powerful dragons, warriors, and leaders would rise to protect all of existence.